

Photographs of North Stoke-on-Trent

From BritPics.co.uk

4-Star Web-Weaver

PDF Document containing Photographs from <http://www.britpics.co.uk/>

The new way to collect photographs from the World Wide Web.

Portable Document Files are an easy way to share documents across the Internet, thanks to Adobe and their free Acrobat Reader anyone with access to the Internet can view high quality documents easily and cheaply. For publishers it is a fairly simple way to have their documents made available to a wide audience.

This document contains photographic images from the BritPics galleries. The first image is 800x1245 pixels. The other images have a resolution of 1200x900 pixels and all can be printed on most colour printers.

Adobe Acrobat enables you to just print off the part of the document appearing in the window. In this way you can print a single picture to an A4 sheet which can then be framed and hung on your wall at home without the trouble and expense of taking the image to a printers.

Pictures of the North of Stoke-on-Trent

The Gilded Angel stands atop the clock tower of the old Burslem town hall in the large photo on page 4.

Not far away down Nile Street is the now deserted factory where once the prestige tableware of Royal Doulton was manufactured, seen in the top picture on page 5.

Below this is a photo of a housing regeneration project under construction, there seem to be an increasing number of these in Stoke-on-Trent.

Page 6 has two photographs showing a building project further north in Tunstall.

Going south now to Hanley there is the Mitchell Memorial theatre next to what was once a cinema and bowling alley, now being cleared for further new projects.

The land around the bottle kilns used to be a pottery works, now all that is left are listed buildings to be incorporated into new buildings.

On page 8 the top photo shows a sculpture dedicated to the industrial heritage of Stoke-on-Trent standing in a landscaped area with the Sentinel office and print works behind, once occupied by Shelton Steel works.

The lower photo is still taken from within the boundary of Stoke-on-Trent near to Brown Edge Schools, a village nestling on the hillside of the valley where the River Trent begins. The city can be seen in the distance.

Page 9 has a view from the same place towards Mow Cop over the rolling fields towards Biddulph.

The final photograph was taken in the early hours of a winters morning in one of the many Victorian Parks within the city, this is the lake in Hanley Park.

Visit some of our other web-sites

My Land Rover Web-Site

The Water-Colour Class

WOW!! Get seen -- get paid!
You can now get paid to drive your car, wear T-shirts, and more!
Just join the EyeEarn Advertising Network and start earning money effortlessly while you go about your day!
It's fun, easy, and no experience is necessary!

The entire contents of this document are protected by international copyright and trademark laws.

The owner of the copyrights and trademarks are www.britpics.co.uk, its affiliates or other third party licensors.

YOU MAY NOT MODIFY, COPY, REPRODUCE, REPUBLISH, UPLOAD, POST, TRANSMIT, OR DISTRIBUTE, IN ANY MANNER, THE MATERIAL CONTAINED IN THIS DOCUMENT, INCLUDING TEXT, GRAPHICS AND/OR PHOTOGRAPHIC IMAGES.

You may print the photographic images from this document solely for your own non-commercial use provided that you agree not to change or modify any of these images.